Dr. Mahli also discussed the crucial role that vaccinations, particularly the HPV vaccine, play in preventing cervical cancer, and highlighted lifestyle choices that can lower the risk of both cancers. Her talk reinforced the need for timely medical intervention, self-examinations, and awareness to empower individuals in safeguarding their health.

Mr. Rahul Gupta from the Serum Institute delivered an informative session on cervical cancer prevention, focusing on the pivotal role of the HPV vaccine. He explained how the vaccine serves as a powerful tool in significantly reducing the risk of cervical cancer by targeting the human papillomavirus (HPV), which is a leading cause of the disease. Mr. Gupta highlighted the importance of early vaccination for young girls and boys to maximise protection and discussed the wide-reaching efforts of the Serum Institute in making the vaccine accessible and affordable. His insights underscored the life-saving potential of vaccination in the fight against cervical cancer and the need for greater awareness and adoption of this preventive measure.
