JULY IS MATERNAL AND CHILD HEALTH MONTH

Recognizing the Problems for Mothers and Babies

Maternal morbidity and mortality in the United States remain higher than in other high-income countries. The problem is especially severe for minority women and those with low socioeconomic status.

About 700 women die of pregnancy-related complications each year according to the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists \(ACOG\). For each death, there are 70 severe unexpected outcomes.

The U.S. maternal mortality rate remains twice as high as Canada's rate and three times as high as the United Kingdom, according to a National Academy of Sciences report. Additionally, the rate of severe maternal morbidity continues to rise. Black women die of preventable complications of pregnancy at up to four times the rate of white women. The reasons include barriers to care, chronic conditions, maternal stress, social determinants of health, systemic racism, and inadequate training for healthcare workers and providers.

The infant mortality rate in the United States was 5.6 deaths per 1,000 live births in 2019, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), with three of the top causes being birth defects, preterm birth, and low birth weight, and maternal complications during pregnancy. Infants are also affected by low breastfeeding rates. Only 58.3 percent of infants were still being breastfed at six months, despite research showing benefits to mothers and babies with exclusive breastfeeding until that time, according to the CDC's 2020 Breastfeeding Report Card. The data also showed that fewer Black mothers start breastfeeding than Asian, White, or Hispanic moms.
