The Enterprise AI Paradox: ROI Challenge beyond personal productivity gain

ChatGPT has become a favorite conversation partner for most of us, becoming our GoTo for knowledge and insights. AI assistants are demonstrating their proficiency by summarizing messages, creating documents, and providing answers to common questions.

Yet, according to Ira Palti, Executive Chairman of GigaSpaces Technologies, enterprise AI adoption remains fundamentally stuck. Despite the hype and investment, most organizations are struggling to prove ROI from generative AI beyond personal productivity gains. The technology is phenomenal, but concrete use cases that transform how businesses actually operate have been largely elusive.

Why?

The problem isn't the AI itself; it's what the AI can't see.

Palti frames the core challenge facing enterprise AI as a “context gap” – the disconnect between powerful language models (LLMs) and the operational data that actually runs businesses which is mostly inaccessible to these AI tools.

This creates a paradox: The AI tools everyone is excited about can't access the information that would make them genuinely transformative. Meanwhile, the valuable operational data sits trapped in structured systems, accessible only through traditional BI reports that take weeks to build and show what happened yesterday, not what is happening today.
