Indian tycoon Ratan Tata dies aged 86

@Reported by BBC

Ratan Tata was one of India's most internationally recognised business leaders.

Indian tycoon Ratan Tata has died aged 86, says the Tata Group, the conglomerate he led for more than two decades.

Tata was one of India's most internationally recognised business leaders.

The Tata Group is one of India's largest companies, with annual revenues in excess of $100bn (£76.5bn).

In a statement announcing Tata's death, the current chairman of Tata Sons described him as a "truly uncommon leader".

Tata was born in a traditional Parsi family in 1937. He studied architecture and structural engineering at Cornell University in the US.

In 1962, he joined Tata Industries - the promoter company of the group - as an assistant and spent six months training at a company plant in Jamshedpur.

From there, he went on to work at the Tata Iron and Steel Company (now Tata Steel), Tata Consultancy Services (TCS) and National Radio and Electronics (Nelco).

In 1991, JRD Tata, who had led the group for over half a century, appointed Ratan Tata as his successor. "He [JRD Tata] was my greatest mentor... he was like a father and a brother to me - and not enough has been said about that," Tata later told an interviewer.

In 2008, the Indian government awarded him the Padma Vibhushan, the country's second-highest civilian honour.
