EDITORIAL

The pandemic is getting the best and worst of it. Best is the inherent talent and entrepreneurship is showing up or getting better worst is the increasing numbers and the mortality associated with the covid crisis in the District.

On the creative side Rtn Dr Narasimhan continues with his stint of breaking record of post card on wildlife conservation and distributed his cards wide and all around the sphere and Ann Deena continues with her flutter photography. Entrepreneur side Ann Divya ventured into Batter and Beyond with a trailer and we wish the best for her on her 20th October 2020 launch. Rtn Chethan has his tilt towards animal husbandry with the homestay experience with fishing and piggery being a part of it. Ann Bhargavi is designing masks and she has come up with interesting concepts of designer and ayurvedic ones. May nothing deter our hope and confidence for life.

STAY SAFE!

-Ann Dr Priyadarshini

EXPERIENTIAL LEARNING

The destiny driven profession took me on the pedal for two and a half decades and looking ahead. The academic progress was the route to my sanity. More than the choice, the availability launched me to Cauvery Institutions, Gonicopal. Having experienced city based education, did go through tremendous cultural shock initially. Walking through it seemed impossible but my HOD and large bunch of students clinched me firm. Memories of my first year teaching experience is unforgettable and has deep impact. Teaching in Kannada was inevitable for Pre University, not being conversant in kannada, did juggle around with the words. Well, every word was interpreted in slang language followed by an echo of laughter in the class. This always stalled my lecture sessions turning me pink with tear filled eyes. The showdown and outburst would make me unhappy more than the insult. The only way to cope was to be part of the fun and laughing at myself. The grim situation smoothened and soon turned out to be one among their favourites. Held firm about teaching in English for the final year B.Com students. I did have an edge over them & looked forward to their sessions. The entertainment for the class was in the mode of challenging my English vocabulary. My self - confidence at every stage was the drive for the class to update themselves with new words making me a test paper. This circumstance inculcated in us the practise of constant use of dictionary. This process transformed into a healthy and knowledge based discussion leading to good academic back up. The constant students evaluation helped me learn the positive & negative ends and enhance my capacity. The fast pace in the flow of the language was only the concern. This took a lot of my effort to come down to their expectation. Gradually the rapport build up well and surprisingly the students started opening up to the extent of their personal concerns. This was indeed a great learning and struck me to believe that every action has a cause and the wave of empathy engulfed me. Initially it was hard to believe of the trial and trauma few of them underwent, was indeed a great challenge. This awakened me to the different set of circumstances that the students are exposed. At this point I realised the good fortune of the students operating from comfort zones. There on, my assertive classroom climate was replaced by solicitous wave. The arousal of the humane in me did not let me turn down any seekers for help, especially of academics. This is when my life lesson began and was happy to have gotten this chance. My students became my object for sculpting and experienced joy seeing it well carved. The journey so far was a great experience and the 'Teachers Day' is one of the best as it's a memory walk& talk.

Shifting my base to a new arena is opening up the vistas to contribute much more to the student community. This has enhanced my enthusiasm to innovate & explore areas that can offerwide opportunities for students in Coorg.

Dr & Ann. Rekha .Chinnappa,

W/ O. Rtn. B.C. Subbaiah
