HON. RTN. AJAY PIRAMAL, CHAIRMAN, PIRAMAL ENTERPRISES, IN CONVERSATION WITH AMIT CHANDRA, CHAIRPERSON, BAIN CAPITAL INDIA ADVISORIES, ON PROFIT, PURPOSE, AND CAN MAKING WEALTH COEXIST WITH SPIRITUALITY?

Amit Chandra: It's truly a wonderful privilege to interview my friend, who's been not just a friend for longer than I've known Archana, actually, but also an inspiration and a partner in a journey we've travelled together for 32 years. I've learned a lot from him, and I hope in the conversation today we can unlock some of these learnings for the benefit of the audience.

I'm going to start with a personal example because topics like this can get very esoteric and theoretical. Nandan did a great job with a personal anecdote, so I'll follow suit.

Everyone knows the incredible accomplishments of Ajay. I remember being in complete awe of him the first time I met him at our family residence in Boston — I think the year was 1992. I just sat across from him; I couldn't speak because I was in complete awe of this man. I came back to India, and he was on the board of the company I joined. He was this remarkable dealmaker.

Everyone's known about his accomplishments in financial services sector and, before that, in pharmaceuticals. But what people don't really know about is something I'm going to talk about now. I've seen a lot of leaders approach their 60s and 70s and focus on making the next billion, spending time with grandchildren, or travelling the world and enjoying life.

But I've had a ringside view of seeing Ajay do something very different. He's been working on a project — probably the best-kept secret — to uplift 50 million Indians from abject poverty. Just soak in that number: 50 million. If they were ranked, they'd be the 30th largest country in the world. That's equivalent to the population of 20 Indian states combined. To attempt this is not trivial.

He's put together an army of 5,000 field workers. He's stitching together an alliance of global and Indian leaders to work on this. I won't go into all the steps involved, but I can tell you it gives him a lot of sleepless nights. He's had to put aside his ego and bring back his convincing powers to get governments, leaders, and individuals to work together to make it happen.

To me, this is probably one of the best examples of ‘profit with purpose.’ So, I want to begin by asking Ajay: why are you doing this?

Ajay Piramal: First of all, let me congratulate President Bimal and First Lady Aradhana for taking over as President of my Club. It’s a big honour — so congratulations and all the best.

Amit is a really good friend. More importantly, I’ve learned a lot from him — his commitment to doing good, his positive energy. He’s a truly great partner.

You asked why I do this. I want to take an example from nature — it gives us air, water, and food for free. We realised the importance of air, oxygen during COVID. Even if you were the richest person, with billions, you’d still be gasping for breath and using all your influence just to get a supply of oxygen.

Is there something to learn from that? Yes — it’s that we take for granted the things given to us freely. So, are we only going to be takers in this world, or are we going to give back?

That’s what every religion tells us — we must give back. The philosophy is simple: when we are born, we cannot be only consumers. Can we leave the world a slightly better place than it was when we came into it? That, I believe, is the only reason I do this.

Amit Chandra: Yeah, but Ajay, it’s not easy to do what you’re doing. You’re literally building a new Piramal organisation with no profit motive. The conversations are difficult — you’re asking people to align with your values; that often results in rejection. Sometimes, people just string you along. It requires aligning so many people. This is tough work. What keeps you going? I mean — why do this at this age?

Ajay Piramal: I take inspiration from my grandfather. He was born in a village in Rajasthan in the 1920s. He came to Mumbai with just ₹50 in his pocket. And before he made any significant fortune, the first thing he did was go back to his village and open a school.

Remember, this was pre-Independence, and Rajasthan was quite conservative. The first school he opened was for girls. The second was for people then called “Harijan” — today known as Dalits. That’s the legacy I come from. I’ve been fortunate to be born in a home that believes in giving back — just like your parents taught you.

So, why do I do it? Frankly, true happiness comes when you give. I’ve raised money in the good old days, as you know, and now I tell my team that I’ve become their salesman. But let me tell you, even the people you’ve connected me with — Amit is a partner in this crime, if I may say — have responded positively. I’ve not yet had a negative response. Maybe it’s out of respect for age, or maybe they genuinely want to help. But I truly believe most people want to do something positive.

Amit Chandra: That’s wonderful. Maybe I want to shift gears a little bit. We are a deeply religious society, right? And you talked about the influence of religion as well. I follow Sikhism. I know you’ve read part of the Granth Sahib, as have I, and the most important prayer in the Guru Granth Sahib is exactly what you opened with — Pavan Guru Pani Pita, Mata Dharat Mahat, which means that unless we respect the elements of nature, we are actually destined to be consigned to dust.

How has religion influenced your spirituality?

Ajay Piramal: I just want to make a little bit of a distinction here. Many people nowadays tell me, “I’m not religious, but I’m very spiritual.” I don’t understand what that means. I think it’s the same thing. Spirituality or religion — whatever you call it — the concepts are the same. These are principles you try and apply in life.

For example, I’ve been studying The Gita for more than 25 years. The opening of The Gita is in a battlefield. Krishna is Arjun’s teacher and best friend. Arjun is the best warrior in the world, and he is in his 20s. In the midst of the battlefield, this lesson of The Gita is taught. It is so relevant — that means it’s relevant for young people, for people who are stressed, and in the most challenging situations.

There’s a lot of learning there. In some ways, some of the principles are universal. Whether you talk about The Gita or the Granth Sahib, which has maybe 5,000 references to Krishna and Ram, some of us don’t like to acknowledge this. These are the extremists — not you, Amit, let me clarify. So, I think these principles are very basic, and they help life. They help negotiate the challenges all of us go through. That’s why they’re important.

Amit Chandra: Picking up from that, Ajay — I think some of us old-timers in the room, people who’ve known you from your very early days — people don’t really realise and appreciate what you started with and where you took it. And people also think that that line was linear, which we know it wasn’t. There were lots of ups and downs.

Help us understand: how did your religious or spiritual bearings help you deal with some of those ups and downs? And maybe, if you could give us some instances of it.

Ajay Piramal: I believe there is not a single person in the world who does not go through ups and downs. I’ll just give you an example from the Ramayan. The Lord is born — the Lord has chosen to come, it’s not that He is just born.

CUBISM AND INDIAN ART: A MESMERISING START TO THE HERITAGE, ART AND CULTURE CALENDAR

On Sunday, July 6th, 2025, Rotary Club of Bombay's Heritage, Art and Culture Committee inaugurated its year's calendar with a truly captivating event — an exclusive, private guided tour of DAG's latest exhibition on Cubism in modern Indian art. Held in collaboration with DAG, this much-anticipated event exceeded all expectations, attracting 37 participants from RCB and their partners, significantly exceeding the planned capacity of 25 due to overwhelming demand.

The exhibition explored the origins and evolution of Cubist thought, not just in the West but more significantly, its nuanced interpretation by modern Indian masters. The guided tour was led by the inimitable Kishor Singh of DAG, whose gripping 60-minute commentary transported attendees deep into the aesthetic, philosophical, and emotional landscapes of the works on display.

Kishor began with an insightful introduction to Western Cubism — a radical artistic departure from naturalism and realism — pioneered by the likes of Picasso and Braque. He then beautifully mapped the journey of these ideas as they crossed continents and were reinterpreted by Indian artists. While the sharp geometricity of Western Cubism often shocks and confronts, Indian artists employed its techniques with gentler strokes, layering their compositions with deeper meanings, complex emotions, and cultural symbolism.

One of the standout pieces at the exhibition was Ramkinkar Baij's sculpture The Poet — a haunting yet tender painted cement depiction of Rabindranath Tagore's head, set on a wooden pedestal. Baij's cubist approach presented Tagore not just as the celebrated polymath but as a deeply human figure, weighed down by sorrow, yet radiating resilience and quiet majesty. This was just one among many fascinating interpretations Kishor offered throughout the walkthrough, drawing appreciative nods and hushed gasps from the audience.

Also on display were works by some of the greatest names in Indian art — Rabindranath and Gaganendranath Tagore, Prosanti Roy, Haren Das, K.G. Subramanyan, Piraji Sagara, S.K. Bakre, G.R. Santosh, George Keyt, Rabin Mondal, Paritosh Sen, Biren De, and many more. The gallery walls were a visual feast, each piece whispering stories of transformation, multiplicity and artistic innovation. For the attendees, it was not just a viewing, but a deeply immersive experience of India's modern art heritage.

The evening concluded on a convivial note, with tea and delicious snacks served amidst spirited conversation. Participants lingered, animatedly discussing their favourite works and moments from the tour.

This thoughtfully curated and flawlessly executed event was spearheaded by Rtn. Arish Dastur and Rtn. Ptn. Radhika Saraf. It marks the beginning of a promising series of exclusive tours with DAG for RCB members. The next exhibition, showcasing the works of Madhavi Parekh, is scheduled for September and promises to be just as enriching. Watch this space!

ROTARACT CLUB PROMOTES FITNESS AND SAFETY AT BY G.K. MARG SCHOOL

The Rotaract Club of Hinduja College recently conducted an impactful event at Bhavishya Yaan's G.K. Marg School, designed to promote fitness and safety among students. The initiative featured two engaging sessions that were both informative and interactive.

The first session introduced students to the benefits of yoga, highlighting its role in enhancing physical health and mental well-being. It encouraged young minds to embrace a healthier, more balanced lifestyle through regular practice.

The second session focused on self-defence, led by a Rotaractor who holds a brown belt in martial arts. Students were taught basic yet effective techniques to protect themselves in threatening situations, including methods to break free from an attacker.

Both sessions were met with enthusiastic participation. The students showed great interest and energy, making the event a successful blend of education and empowerment. It was a day of learning, awareness, and fun—leaving a lasting impression on all who attended.
