EDITORIAL

It is essential to provide moral support to a cancer survivor. It helps and motivates them for a smooth recovery and emotional well-being. There are many ways to be with them. You can be a good listener so that they can express their feelings freely and should not have the fear of getting any advice. Encourage them to enhance their strength and patience. Spend quality time with them and make them feel that you are always present and available. Most important is to persuade them to follow a balance diet, motivate them to do exercises and support them to keep up with mental wellness. Try to connect them to different support groups and counselling centres. Cancer's recovery is a life-long journey. The journey is full of ups and downs. In these difficult times they need emotional and personal support. Only the caregivers can play a crucial role in providing all the support. They feel all those pains and sufferings along with the survivors. They are the unsung heroes in a cancer patient's journey.
