EDITORIAL

Awards and rewards play a significant role in the holistic development of school children. They not only recognize students' hard work and achievements but also motivate them to strive for excellence. When students receive awards, they feel valued and confident, which encourages them to perform better in academics as well as extracurricular activities. Competitions organized by Rotary provide a wonderful platform for students to showcase their creativity, talents, and ideas. Such events nurture a healthy competitive spirit among children and teach them the importance of discipline, perseverance, and sportsmanship. Winning an award is certainly gratifying, but even participation helps students learn new skills and gain valuable experience. It inspires them to think creatively and push their boundaries. Moreover, awards and rewards help students set higher goals for themselves and work diligently to achieve them. In this way, recognition becomes a powerful tool in shaping confident, motivated, and capable individuals for the future.
