-श्रीभगवद्गीता 2.22

“As a person puts on new garments, giving up old ones, similarly, the soul accepts new material body, giving up the old and useless one.”

The word “Organ Donation” brings curiosity to a person “Does my religion accept this?” If the person had donated before the demise: it’s okay, but if not then after the individual’s death the family will face this dilemma.

Organ donation is even described in Vedas and Puranas. A bright example of that is sage Dadhichi, who had donated his bones to make Vajrabana to kill Asuras by the request of lord Bishnu. King Shibi donated his body to save a pigeon. Lord Ganesha is an example of this. Many narrations are there in Charaka and Shusruta Samhita about organ and limb transplantation. There are some reports that skin transplantation was done by surgeons in 500 BC. Maybe the above shloka was about organ donation. Maybe it states that the soul, representing the organs, should find another body to reside.

Generosity, duty, charity, co-operation are virtuous qualities of Islam which encourages organ donation. But according to Shariat the dignity of the donor should be maintained throughout the procedure of removal of the organ.

In Christianity healing and saving life is a great gift. Pope John Paul II has stated, “The Catholic Church would promote the fact that there is a need for organ donors and that Christians should accept this as a ‘challenge to their generosity and fraternal love’ so long as ethical principles are followed.”

Still some people are not comfortable with the idea. Now is the time for individuals and organizations to take a step forward. Convey the message by spreading knowledge through rallies and awareness camps. This action may help to reduce the suffering of the thousands of people who die annually for the lack of available donors.
