ROTARY INTERNATIONAL NEWS

E-club develops young leaders through online workshops
By Hannah Wallace

Khumbo Chilimira Ndovi, a 25-year-old university lecturer in Malawi, has impressive leadership credentials as an accomplished young professional in the southeastern African country. She also knows how to have fun for a cause.

As president of the Rotaract Club of Blantyre, Chilimira Ndovi organizes lively fundraisers like karaoke parties and trivia nights to raise money for blankets for babies born to mothers in need. Now, she's thinking about how to make an even bigger impact. "I want to move on to a bigger project where we're maybe building a hospital wing or where we're building a library for a school," she says.

To help her get there, Chilimira Ndovi found a mentor in a seemingly unlikely place: 5,000 miles away in Scotland. Specifically, the Rotary E-Club of Southern Scotland, which recently started a virtual leadership development program that pairs Rotarians who are industry leaders with younger professionals for online workshops and one-on-one mentorship

The four-month program included lectures on everything from ethical leadership to managing conflicts. The club, whose members are from Europe, Africa, the U.S., and Australia, introduced the leadership program last year in a pilot phase with hopes it will spread districtwide. Besides giving the club a meaningful focus, members hope the program will also familiarize young professionals with the kinds of career and leadership development opportunities that are available to Rotary members.

Early signs are positive. Chilimira Ndovi found a new respect for Rotary and is planning to transition to Rotary membership after her Rotaract presidency. She was paired with mentor Denis Robson, a Rotarian based in Innerleithen, Scotland, for conversations that often focused on navigating change in the workplace. "I want to know how I can manage change, manage differences, where I don't just spiral because something is not going according to plan," Chilimira Ndovi remembers telling him.
