Passport Rotary club Model - Innovative concept

Passport clubs get their name from the idea or have time constraints that make that members essentially have a "passport" attending a weekly meeting difficu to visit as many other clubs in their area as The Sacramento club requires mem they can. Typically, a passport club holds a limited number of its own meetings, but it has regular board and committee meetings and plans frequent social events to build camaraderie

The Rotary Club of Greater Sacramento Passport One, California, proudly claims to be the first passport club. It was founded by Michael Reinero and Past District Governor Glenn N. Fong in 2015, with RI's approval. Carol S. Langley, club president, describes three significant features of the passport concept Flexibility — Members may participate at a level that's convenient for them.

Affordability - Costs are kept to a minimum because fewer meetings include a meal.

Inclusivity - The model attracts new members, as well as transferring and returning members who travel frequently attending a weekly meeting difficult.

The Sacramento club requires members to perform at least 40 hours of service a year, which can include attending a Greater Sacramento Passport One club meeting or any other Rotary club's meeting, helping other clubs with fundraisers or projects, volunteering with other organizations, and contributing to The Rotary Foundation (every $100 donation counts as 10 service hours).

One of the top benefits of the passport model is the emphasis on service, which encourages members to take action to make communities better wherever, whenever, and however they see fit, says Jim Eaton, president of the Rotary Club of the Central Coast-Passport, California. His club requires members to do 60 hours of community service a year, but members' average is closer to 150 hours.

"I am most excited about the commitment of our members to community service in general. It doesn't have to be Rotary specific," Eaton says, "I smile when people tell me all the wonderful things they are doing.

Eaton adds that his club's passport model has attracted many members who were on the verge of leaving Rotary because of the time commitment it requires. As a result, his club has grown from five members to 27 in a little more than 18 months.

"We don't recruit active members of another club, but we [encourage the] club presidents around us, if they have somebody who is going away, to have them talk to us before leaving Rotary totally," Eaton says.

Flexibility and innovation are two key pillars for Rotary's future growth. Read more about what other clubs are doing to attract new members, retain current members, and increase diversity in The Rotarian.

OPERATION SINDOOR AND THE EVOLUTION OF INDIA'S MILITARY STRATEGY AGAINST PAKISTAN

India struck inside Pakistan in response to a terrorist attack. Once more, the two sides escalated — again to unprecedented levels — before agreeing to a ceasefire. It is tempting to consider this latest crisis as a somewhat larger replay of the last Indo-Pakistani crisis in 2019, but in fact it signifies a notable shift in India's military strategy towards Pakistan, which is considered New normal now.

The latest crisis was triggered by a terrorist attack at Pahalgam on April 22, which was especially provocative — and likely calculated to be so — by targeting specifically Hindu men for point-blank execution. Tensions rose immediately, with consistent exchanges of small-arms fire across the Line of Control that separates Indian- and Pakistani-controlled parts of Kashmir. Then, soon after midnight on May 7, India launched its military response, dubbed Operation Sindoor. It used a mix of long-range stand-off weapons, including air-launched missiles and loitering munitions, to target nine sites belonging to terrorist groups Lashkar-e-Taiba and Jaish-e-Muhammad, groups that have frequently attacked India, including at Pahalgam.

The two sides traded tit-for-tat rounds of stand-off weapon attacks against each other's military installations. The war like situation intensified on May 9 and 10, with effective Indian strikes against key Pakistan Air Force bases and Pakistan launching its own counter-offensive, Operation Bunyan Marsoos, which was completely thwarted by Indian armed forces. USA president Trump tried to take credit of ceasefire when the two belligerents agreed to ceasefire on the afternoon of May 10.

Despite some minor violations, the ceasefire seems to be holding, and the crisis seems now to have concluded. For India, this crisis represents an important evolution in its military strategy against Pakistan — shifting from the issuance of threats to change Pakistani behavior, to the direct imposition of costs to degrade terrorists' capacity. This new cost-imposition strategy has a compelling logic, India will respond to any terrorist attack as act of war and will not be cowed down with threat of nuclear assault from Pakistan. Long Live Bharat! Salute to our armed forces!!

The Bajau people

The Bajau people are the first tribe in the world that has evolved to adapt to life under the sea. They spend their whole life living above the sea and foraging at the bottom of the ocean. They live in temporary houses on pilots and on their ships, scattered along the seas of Indonesia, Malaysia and the Philippines.

They have lived this way for more than 1,000 years, and their diet depends entirely on the surrounding seafood. This forces them to work underwater all day to catch shrimp, crabs, fish and squid.

For this reason, Bajau drill their ear drums to balance the pressure between the outer ear and middle ear, which helps them avoid discomfort when diving into great depths. However, drilling the ear drums can also reduce your hearing ability and make them more susceptible to ear infections. This is a sacrifice Bajau people must accept to live underwater.

The extremely unusual thing is that they can dive for more than 13 minutes at a depth of 60 meters below sea level. Turns out they have a much larger mucus than normal people. This organ is capable of pumping more oxygen into the blood and works very similar to a biological diving tank. Their spleen has a larger volume by more than 50 percent compared to normal people.

The special thing is that this feature is not only found in divers, but also in other tribe members, including children who have never dived before. This means they've evolved to live more easily under the sea.
