About the Celebrity

Imagine a daily wage worker in Chennai harbour shooting to fame with just one song! Gana Ulaganathan is still struggling hard to cope with his celebrity status. Offers are galore and if inside reports are true, even Shankar is making efforts to rope in this guy into his next film. He made his debut in the Tamil tinsel town with the song Kummango from Machi. It was lyricist Kapilan that had introduced him. With the movie bombing miserably, he went unnoticed—unnoticed till Mishkin's Chitthiram Paesudhedi. Ulaganathan, a ninth grade dropout, began his career not as a singer but as a labourer in Chennai Harbour. Singing has been his hobby and he has sung more than 200 songs that include devotional songs of Lord Ayyappa. It is not just gana songs. He is familiar with light songs, western pop and also classical songs. He studied keyboard under Mandolin Nithya Master and Vaipaattu from Ammapaettaai Krishnamurthy. It was Mishkin who got the idea of casting this man for the song. He was impressed by the way Ulaganathan made gestures while recording for the song. It is the same gestures you find on screen today. Ulaganathan is mobbed whenever he is spotted in public places. People want the Vaazha Meen song to be sung again and again. Invitations are pouring in from abroad for stage performances. But the guy remains modest. He has many movies & assignments in hand now. He may be familiar with light music, western pop or eastern classical but, Ulaganathan is at home only in gana songs. He says it's in gana songs you can express a spectrum of emotions. And it goes direct to heart.
